

RENOVATE YOUR RELATIONSHIP

A manual for men

A simple toolbox, easy steps.

 MensLine
Australia

Relationships Australia[®]
VICTORIA

Authors

2020 edition:

Relationships Australia Victoria: Paul Wiseman, Dom Alford,
with review by On the Line.
Editing and design by Relationships Australia Victoria.

First edition:

Relationships Australia Victoria: Andrew Bickerdike, Tony Gee, Paul Wiseman.
MensLine Australia: Andrew King and Paul Ridgewell.
Consultant: Terry Melvin.
Research, writing, editing, book design and production: Helpful Partners Pty Ltd.

Acknowledgements

We acknowledge the many men we work with and who put continual effort into improving their relationships. We have drawn on some of their quotes and reflections.

Funding

Relationships Australia Victoria acknowledges the funding it receives from the Australian and Victorian Governments.

Copyright notice

© Relationships Australia Victoria and On the Line.
This work is copyright. You may download, display, print and reproduce this material in unaltered form only (retaining this notice) for your personal, non-commercial use or use within your organisation. All rights are reserved.

Requests and enquiries concerning reproduction rights should be addressed to:

Chief Executive Officer
Relationships Australia Victoria
P.O. Box 180, 2 Prospect Hill Road
Camberwell Victoria 3124
Email: enquiries@rav.org.au

About this booklet

Like a manual, this booklet is best dipped into, not read from cover to cover. Making changes can be difficult and requires courage.

Your feedback

Help us to improve future editions.
Send your feedback to communications@rav.org.au.

All images in this booklet are for illustrative purposes only.

1
2
3
4
5
6
7
8
9
10
11
12
13
14
15
16
17
18
19
20
21
22
23
24
25
26
27
28
29
30
31
32
33
34
35
36
37
38
39
40
41
42
43

Contents

WHY THIS BOOKLET?

The project: Renovate your relationship 4

PROJECT SCOPE: MEN AND RELATIONSHIPS

Project overview 7

Project plan 8

What do you want to build? 8

Measuring up 9

Project foundations 10

Trust, respect and equality 10

Resolving conflict 10

Mutual decision-making and shared responsibility 11

Good communication 12

Intimacy 12

PROJECT TOOLBOX

Project tools 13

Tool 1: Working together? 14

Tool 2: Avoiding misunderstandings 16

Tool 3: Sharpen your tools 18

Tool 4: Resolving conflict 19

Tool 5: When the roof blows off!

Dealing with anger and frustration 22

Tool 6: Who has the power? Abuse and violence 24

Tool 7: Self-maintenance 27

Tool 8: Renovate your sex life 29

Tool 9: Love 31

Tool 10: Valuing differences 32

Tool 11: Appreciation 33

Tool 12: When trust breaks down 34

Tool 13: Children – Planning for the extension 35

RESOURCES

When it's time to consult a professional 37

Where to get further assistance 39

Suggested reading 41

Why this booklet?

Renovate your relationship is a booklet about men doing maintenance work for themselves and their relationship.

Men tend to overlook the problems in their relationship until it's too late. These guys often wish they had done maintenance work beforehand and never reached this point.

When relationships break down, it can make you feel gutted, and knock your trust and confidence - as if the building has suddenly collapsed.

The challenge here is to see the cracks appearing and take action.

Your renovation project

Just like a home, your relationship always needs work. You need to maintain and repair things when they get tired and run-down.

Before you get started on renovating your relationship, read this manual first. Read the instructions and make sure you know how to make the renovation work.

This manual is a call to action. Don't wait until your relationship is in trouble. Use this manual as your set of instructions for your relationship – your most important renovation project. It's worth the work!

The book has been inspired by the men, women and families we have worked with over many years.

The project: Renovate your relationship

Project rationale

- Healthy relationships are important.
- Men can pick up on the warning signs that their relationship is struggling.
- Men can take the first step towards relationship maintenance and improvement.
- Men can tackle issues before they become a crisis.

A crisis point in a relationship can be an opportunity for change, but if a crisis has gone on for some time, then it can be more difficult to bring about positive relationship change.

Men like projects

Men can put a lot of energy into renovating houses; not just paintwork, but keeping things solid underneath. You can use your skills to make your relationship work!

“ We stopped talking about stuff and just did what was needed to be done around the house. Guess we just grew apart.”

- Nathan, 29

“ I had a sense it wasn't the best but I thought we were doing ok. I did all the physical stuff around the house but I didn't think much about anything. We didn't talk about it. Then the crisis came. Now she's gone I realise we never talked. Guess I should have acted earlier.”

- Jim, 47

For more on the project scope and overview see Men and relationships on the next page.

For the project tools, see Project toolbox on page 13.

Project scope: Men and relationships

Changing times

Think centimetres, laser levels, creativity and imagination!

Confused?

Sometimes that's how relationships feel these days. The old, 'me breadwinner, you homemaker' model is gone, and now relationships are much more about sharing responsibilities. Men are looking for different ways of being dads and having relationships.

In a lot of situations, both the man and his partner work, so domestic tasks are shared. Many men want a better balance in their lives between work and home, and want to be more involved in parenting.

However, the statistics¹ show that a lot of dads end up working full-time while their partner is at home during the first 12 months of their child's life, and dads continue to work full-time even when both parents are working and the kids are older.

So, wanting that balance is one thing, but actually following through is the important bit.

The wear and tear, the stresses and strains of life

Financial worries, work pressures, chronic illness, death in the family, losing a job, moving house, having children, the list goes on.

Stresses and strains bring new challenges to couples every day.

¹ Australian Institute of Family Studies. (2019, February 12). Work and family. <https://aifs.gov.au/facts-and-figures/work-and-family>

Project overview

Think about all the things you really value, such as:

- your partner
- your house
- your garden
- your hobbies
- your sport
- your car
- your family
- your friends
- your job.

If you had to give them up, which would you give up last?

For most men, their relationships with others are more important than anything else. How about you?

Project features that other men like

- Men identify their partner as their best mate. (True for 80% of Australian men²).
- Men want close and tender relationships with their partner.
- Men feel confused, hurt or betrayed when relationships do not work out.
- Men often do not express their emotions and sometimes their partners often fail to recognise the significant feelings that men experience.
- Men want closeness; to be supported, to be held.
- Men want a trusting, honest and loyal friend.
- Men want somebody to share things with; goals, hopes and values.

² Edgar, D. (1997). Men, Mateship, Marriage. HarperCollins (Australia) Publishers.

Project plan

What do you want to build?

Generally, you can't build well without a plan.

Take a look at the list on the opposite page.

Tick some of the boxes or add things of your own.

Now take the next step...

Sit down with your partner and ask them what they want. This is a listening challenge. For instructions on listening see page 18.

Are you both looking for similar things from your relationship? How do you accommodate your differences?

It's easier to plan a renovation if you're both looking at, and having input into the plans.

“ It was only when I sat down and really listened to my partner that I remembered how much we had in common.”

- John, 48

Renovation is a lot easier if your partner is involved.

Measuring up

Many relationships work fine without all these components, but your answers and the differences between your partner's answers should help you identify where your relationship needs work.

What do you want from your relationship?

Do you want to:

- talk about friends, activities and how your day went?
- discuss issues openly and make joint decisions?
- share the cooking, housework and parenting?
- share similar values?
- have differing likes and dislikes and respect each others' differences?
- offer comfort when the other is upset?
- talk through and resolve conflict?
- be able to be alone without feeling lonely?
- feel valued, listened to and encouraged?
- trust and feel trusted?
- have a sex life you both enjoy?
- feel you can be yourself?

Do you want someone to:

- talk with on a deeper level?
- have children with?
- share the parenting pleasures and responsibilities?
- help bring in the money?
- share worries, concerns and problems with?
- do things with: travel, eat out, dance, outings with friends etc.?
- share interests with: sport, film, music etc.?
- make plans for the future and grow old with?
- love?
- share intimacy with, not just sex?

Project foundations

Good relationships are built on solid scaffolding, which includes the following.

Trust, respect and equality

A healthy relationship is founded on trust, respect and equality.³

- A healthy relationship leads to confident, supported and happy parents – which is great for kids! It also means dads end up spending more time with their kids, kids are emotionally better off, and mums feel more supported and are more likely to be better mothers.⁴
- Partners respect themselves and each other.
- Partners feel equal - there's no ownership or domination by one person.
- There are equal rights, opportunities and responsibilities.
- Mutual trust develops over time, holding the relationship firmly in place.

See When trust breaks down on page 34.

Resolving conflict

Unresolved conflict can damage relationships. In good relationships, couples work out a way of discussing issues and difficulties so that they don't keep coming back.

“ My family avoided conflict. Mum wouldn't argue in front of the kids, and Dad just hoped the problem would just go away. In my relationship, I started off just like them but the same issues kept coming back again and again and we nearly broke up. It's not like we agree on everything but at least we talk about issues and difficulties so that they don't keep coming back.”
- Craig, 47

See Resolving conflict on page 19.

Mutual decision-making and shared responsibility

Both people share responsibility for the tasks and decisions.

“ We both work so we share the tasks. It's not like we do half of everything. I don't do much shopping or cooking but I do other stuff like getting the kids showered and cleaning up the kitchen. It works for us.”

- Aman, 34

Embrace change. Adapt or get left behind.

³ Healthdirect. (2018). Building healthy relationships. <https://www.healthdirect.gov.au/building-healthy-relationships>

⁴ Rosenberg, J., & Wilcox, W. B. (2006). The Importance of Fathers in the Healthy Development of Children. U.S. Department of Health and Human Services.

Good communication

The strongest feature of a healthy relationship is good communication. Partners can communicate thoughts, feelings and opinions in an environment of openness and acceptance.

“ She just listens quietly and once I get going I am able to talk about things I never would have told anyone before we met! She is my best mate!”

See Sharpen up your listening on page 18.

Intimacy

Without intimacy, couples drift apart and lose that closeness that once made the relationship vital and exciting. Intimacy means different things to different people.

“ It is hard to answer the question “what is intimacy?” I know I take it for granted. It can happen when we talk or share deep stuff about each other. It’s not just about hugs, kisses or even sex. I know it demands a lot of trust between you and that other person. It’s actually more about that closeness you feel together.”

- Con, 55

Project toolbox

Check out these tools and make them work for you.

Project tools

DIY (Do It Yourself) means doing it yourself – not leaving it up to someone else! This booklet works through the following tools.

- Tool 1: Working together
- Tool 2: Avoiding misunderstandings
- Tool 3: Sharpen your tools
- Tool 4: Resolving conflict
- Tool 5: When the roof blows off! Anger and frustration
- Tool 6: Who has the power? Abuse and violence
- Tool 7: Self-maintenance
- Tool 8: Renovate your sex life
- Tool 9: Love
- Tool 10: Valuing differences
- Tool 11: Appreciation
- Tool 12: When trust breaks down
- Tool 13: Children – Planning for the extension

Sometimes a professional is necessary!

Like calling for an electrician, if things get tricky you can always call for help.

See Resources on page 37.

Tool 1: Working together

A reality check

A renovation project is easier with a mate to work with.
A mate who is working with you; one you know, trust and like.

You might think you know everything there is to know about yourself and your partner, but have you really thought about it? Do you still have the same hopes, dreams and values?

A set of unfinished statements or questions is shown on the opposite page. Write down your answers and then ask your partner to do the same. Make a date with each other to share your answers.

Tell each other what you've both come up with. It's a good idea to listen without any interruption or debate. Just take in what your partner says, or agree to share your notes.

How do the answers affect your renovation project?

My thoughts about me

- My life works best when...
- My relationship works best when...
- The 2 most important things in my life are...
- 2 things I hate doing are...
- 2 beliefs/values I like in me are...
- 2 ways I behave that I like about myself are...
- 2 aspects of me that I value in my relationship are...
- 2 aspects of me that I would like to change are...

My thoughts about my partner

- The 2 most important things in my partner's life are...
- 2 things my partner hates doing are...
- 2 beliefs/values I like in my partner are...
- 2 ways my partner behaves that I like are...
- 2 things about my partner that I value in my relationship are...
- 2 things about my partner that I would like them to work on are...

“ I was unsure about doing this exercise but apart from a couple of points of difference, it was reassuring to realise that we both still care about the same things after all this time.”

- Anton, 39

Notes

Tool 2: Avoiding misunderstandings

Some people are better communicators than others. Communication is something we all need to learn and improve on, because it's an essential part of any healthy relationship. This includes our communication and relationship with ourselves as well. Ask yourself; "What am I feeling? What am I thinking? What am I wanting? How much of this have I shared with my partner?"

Communication is very complex. We may hear things incorrectly, or misinterpret the message. It's important when communicating with your partner that you:

- are clear about what you want to communicate
- convey your message so that it can be received and understood as you want it to be.

It is also important that your partner:

- hears your message accurately
- understands what you mean.

Misunderstandings can occur at any stage and can lead to hurt, confusion or anger. It's important to guard against distortion and make sure that your message is heard by your partner without them feeling attacked.

Try:

- being aware of how you are feeling about your partner at the time. This can influence how you communicate
- using "I" statements like, "I am sad that you decided not to help them out", not, "You never want to help them"
- checking with your partner about whether you have understood their message accurately before continuing
- valuing how you and your partner have different ideas and thoughts about things. There is no right or wrong way, just what gets done with how we are different from each other. Try valuing your differences, rather than getting caught in an unhelpful, circle of "I'm right and you are wrong"
- acknowledging each other's contributions to the tasks at hand.

Communicating isn't just about words – your tone of voice, facial expressions, body language and even silence communicate as much, if not more, than the words spoken.

See Active listening on page 18.

“ I have to work away from home a lot and one night my partner started crying saying I was not at home enough. I responded ‘What would you like me to do? I am prepared to leave my job but it’s going to be hard to find another one.’

She replied, ‘I don’t want you to do anything! I just want you to listen and hear what I’m saying!’ As a guy, I tend to jump to trying to find a solution. It’s easy to forget that listening is often the best place to start.”

- Barry, 35

Tool 3: Sharpen your tools

Everyone has two ears and one mouth

Many people complain that their feelings, opinions and priorities are ignored or not heard.

Good listening is love in action - it will bring you closer. If you want to be heard, then first learn to listen. The aim is simply to hear what your partner thinks and feels.

There are some simple techniques for good listening.

Active listening dos

- ✓ Make good eye contact.
- ✓ Speak quietly but clearly.
- ✓ Be relaxed and try not to frown.
- ✓ Use lots of nods, 'uh huh...' and 'I see...'
- ✓ If your partner says something you do not understand, ask for clarification.
- ✓ Ask 'open' questions that begin with, 'who...', 'what...', 'where...' or 'when...'. These open up conversation and invite them to continue what they are saying.

Active listening don'ts

- ✗ Don't criticise or enter into a debate. Don't cut your partner off before they have finished speaking.
- ✗ Don't try to correct them or defend yourself. Just listen.
- ✗ Try not to leap to a solution; stay in the moment and sit with the feeling.

Why should I practice this?

Listening is a skill, you need to learn, practice and work hard.

Do try to summarise what they have said and how they feel. Use your own words and say something like, "It sounds like you feel... when I...".

Ask your partner: "How can I do better?" Listen to their answer using the tips above. You might have just started the groundwork for your relationship renovation.

Tool 4: Resolving conflict

Unresolved repeated conflict is like rust – it can corrode something that once was fresh and strong. Like rust, you cannot just leave it and hope it will go away.

The bad news: conflict is inevitable.

The good news: if dealt with well, it won't necessarily be destructive. In fact, it can be enriching because our differences are also what we have to offer each other.

Child safety alert!

It can be very distressing for children if their parents argue and fight in front of them. If you are abusive towards each other in front of your children, this can negatively affect your children.

But there's good news. If you and your partner are in conflict and follow the following steps well, children can see the benefits of managing conflict in respectful and thoughtful ways.

- Treat each other with respect.
- Be clear with your children and explain that they don't need to be concerned about the conflict.
- Explain that the conflict is for you and your partner, as parents, to deal with.

Signs of damaging conflict

Are your disagreements and arguments always about the same things?

Do you end up shouting, name calling or being hostile?

Does one or both of you:

- defend yourself and make out it's nothing to do with you?
- refuse to talk it over?
- become so angry and upset that you can forget what you are arguing about?
- take hours or days to calm down?
- let it go on for hours at a time?
- give the other person the 'silent treatment'?

The anti-corrosion treatment

- Think about something you repeatedly argue about.
- Talk about it at a time when you are both feeling good and calm (and not under the influence of alcohol).
- Speak to your partner without being demeaning or intimidating.
- Complain about what your partner does, not what they are.
- Listen to what your partner says it's like for them.
- Accept responsibility for what you can. Change what you can about your behaviour even while asking them to change their own.
- Remind yourself what is good in your partner. Tell them.
- Don't lose your sense of humour!
- Avoid the 'same old' responses you've used in the past. This only maintains the issues.
- Ask yourself, "If I was to do my side of this differently, what would I say or do?"
- Accept how you are different from each other and value this more.
- Stop the conversation if it isn't working and come back to it later.

“ We were having the usual argument because I hadn't cleaned up. She doesn't realise how much I actually do. When I calmed down we were able to discuss it like two adults. I was able to admit that the point she was making was fair enough.”

- Theo, 43

Unresolvable issues

For some people there are issues that will never be resolved. Sometimes it is useful to know what these are and simply agree to leave them alone.

Consulting a professional

If you think you and your partner do have difficulty resolving conflict, you might need to consult a professional. If your conflict gets out of control, if there is frequent abuse and shouting, you should seek help.

See Where to get further assistance on page 39.

Tool 5: When the roof blows off! Dealing with anger and frustration

Anger and frustration are the feelings most easy to express. It's generally more acceptable for men to express these feelings rather than hurt, sadness or fear.

Feelings of anger or frustration need to be managed carefully to ensure they don't damage communication. Anger is not usually a good response to problems, even if it seems helpful in the short term.

Being angry or frustrated is easy but showing sadness, fear or hurt is the hard bit.

“It's taken me ages to be able to talk things through. It is not about being wimpy or aggressive. It is recognising that others have feelings and needs too and that the differences between you must be negotiated.”

- Christopher, 47

What can you do?

Leaving can make matters worse. If you're in the middle of an argument, don't just walk off. Ask for five minutes to finish the discussion.

Find a way to calm down. Count to 10 or take some deep breaths. Do something physical; walk, run, kick a footy, do anything to calm down.

- Get clearer about what you are feeling. Behind the anger, are you hurt, sad or some other feeling? Listen to your body.
- Get clearer about exactly what is making you angry. Often the smallest things can annoy us, if we are tired or stressed.
- Often the smallest things become big when they are not dealt with quickly. Don't let things build up. Telling someone that you felt angry when they did or said something is more helpful than sitting on it or acting out.
- Stay focused on what you want to say. Don't let the situation escalate into a yelling match.
- Be careful about who you express your anger to. Don't just dump it on the people closest to you, or on people who are less powerful than you. For example, don't yell at your partner, children, or dog when you are really angry with your boss.
- Ask yourself, "If I was managing this better, what would my partner, children or work colleagues be seeing and hearing?"

Tool 6: Who has the power? Abuse and violence

Power is defined as the ability to act or have influence over others. Relationships have power differences in them.

How do you and your partner manage power and power differences between you both, and with your children, family, friends or work colleagues?

- Does someone have more power?
- Does someone want to be 'top-dog'?
- Does someone want to make all the decisions?
- Does someone want to have the final word?

Has the power in the relationship become fixed in favour of one over the other? Is one person more concerned about imposing their will and disregarding or belittling the other person's ideas or experiences?

Power sharing

Healthy relationships are built on the values of equality and respect. Power is shared and there is no attempt to make one partner subject to the will of the other. Decisions are made together or at least with the consent of the other partner.

Abuse: the greatest risk to your relationship

There is never any excuse for threatening, abusive and violent behaviour, no matter how angry or frustrated we are. This is the greatest risk to any relationship. It brings unwanted and damaging consequences for all concerned – your partner, your children and yourself. Violence is against the law.

Other forms of abuse

Abuse or family violence may be:

- physical: hitting, slapping, restraining, threatening
- verbal: harassing, frightening, insulting, undermining
- sexual: forcing a partner to have sex against their will
- emotional: ignoring, controlling
- social: using put-downs, lying to others about a partner
- financial: controlling money, incurring debts without consultation
- spiritual: not letting a partner practise their religion
- stalking: spying, loitering, harassing
- gaslighting: minimising concerns and views.

The warning signs

- Do you feel you have to control people by imposing your will?
- Do you have difficulty expressing your needs, resulting in you feeling stressed or powerless?
- Do you have a short fuse and a pattern of exploding?
- Do you get angry when you drink?
- Do you withdraw and say nothing until you can't stand it anymore?
- Do you lack respect for your partner?

If this sounds like you, you may need help. Contact:

MensLine Australia
1300 78 99 78
mensline.org.au

OR

Relationships Australia
1300 364 277
www.relationships.org.au

What can you do?

Stop and think before you act.

- Take time out to cool down.
- Talk about your feelings or what you want.
- Be prepared to negotiate.
- Remember that your view is just that – yours. Are you willing to hear your partner's views as well?
- Ask for help (see contact information for MensLine Australia and Relationships Australia) on the previous page.

If you behave abusively or violently, you need to change. It is unlikely you can change this behaviour on your own.

The first steps to change are:

- taking responsibility for your behaviour
- focusing less on what the other person is doing and more on yourself
- giving yourself and your partner or children more choices, options and possibilities
- beginning. This is the first step. It is a process that never ends
- seeking help from professionals, but also family, friends and colleagues who you trust will be honest with you and not just tell you what you want to hear. This takes courage.

“ The leader of this anger management group was talking about controlling strong emotions. Suddenly he kicked a chair. I was shocked and the light dawned. This is what my partner feels when I kick or hit the wall at home. I went home and told her, 'now I understand'.”

- Greg, 32

Tool 7: Self-maintenance

Looking after yourself

Many men spend a lot of their time and energy providing for the family. As a result, we can become cut off from the people and activities we used to enjoy. This situation can get worse when children come along. Of course, you want to care for your partner and your children, but you also have the responsibility to look after yourself too. Just as men are notoriously bad at going to the doctor, we also sometimes do not take good care of ourselves in other ways.

Find your space

Togetherness is great, but everyone needs some quiet time or space, particularly in an intimate relationship and especially when there is a growing family. Many men claim space in their 'sheds', where they can retreat at times for some quiet reflection. Not everyone is a handyman, so maybe you have a study or a studio, or somewhere altogether different like the garden. Your space is somewhere you can relax and recharge.

Work and life balance

It's important for both you and your partner to have a work-life balance that supports your personal and professional needs. Start by having a conversation with your partner about how you're both feeling.

“ My daughter has cystic fibrosis. It changed our lives. I became a workaholic. My wife and I never talked about anything else. I was burning out. I managed to see what was happening before it wrecked my marriage. My partner and I settled for a more relaxed lifestyle. I earn less but my daughter still gets good care and life is heaps better.”

- Rodney, 54

“ Frankly, you can't expect to work on your relationship unless you've got your own s#$t together.”

- Ben, 35

Depression and anxiety

Depression is more than a low mood. It's a serious illness in which you feel sad, down or miserable most of the time.

Anxiety is a feeling that something bad is going to happen. You may feel irritable or constantly in a bad mood. Anxiety can affect your physical health.

Depression and anxiety can also be indications to ourselves, or signs that we need to take time doing things that will nurture us and help us to feel better about ourselves.

If you regularly feel depressed or anxious, see your GP or call Beyond Blue on 1300 22 4636 (www.beyondblue.org.au).

Drugs, alcohol and other ways of coping

It's easy to turn to drugs or alcohol if you're feeling low. Other men may smoke too much or overeat.

These unhealthy coping behaviours actually lead to more stress in the long term. Be aware of this cycle.

Friends

Relationships tend to be stronger when partners don't just have mutual friends but maintain their own friends as well.

Don't cut yourself off from friends. Call up an old mate and organise an activity you enjoy together.

What can you do?

- Have regular health checks. Make sure your doctor covers blood pressure, diabetes, prostate, heart disease, cholesterol and diet.
- Do something each day to stay fit.
- Have at least two alcohol-free days each week.
- Manage stress with healthy relaxation methods.
- Negotiate a good balance of time for yourself as well as time as a couple.

Tool 8: Renovate your sex life

Don't confuse sex with intimacy

If sex is the physical act, intimacy is the closeness of feeling loved, valued, and respected for yourself without judgement.

Without this kind of intimacy, sex can become a desperate and disappointing experience.

Intimacy with a partner does not always need to result in having sex.

Talk about it

Men may not have the same desires as their partners.

Sex is complicated. It probably means different things to you and your partner. It may be a new and challenging discussion for you but it's worth it if you genuinely desire a deeper relationship.

Discuss these things with your partner

- What do they love about your relationship?
- What excites them sexually?
- Are there things that don't work for your partner sexually?
- Share your likes and dislikes with your partner.
- How can you work together to improve your sex lives?
- If the focus of your relationship/sex life was more broadly on affection, verbally and physically, what would this look like?

“ I was so craving contact. It's terrible. Some of my friends go off to hookers. I went and had fortnightly massages instead. It helped but it is still terrible.”

- Tony, 26

Tool 9: Love

Feelings of love, affection and warmth go through ups and downs in a relationship.

Love requires regular maintenance.

It's easy to take love for granted, but like a home, love needs regular upkeep to stay fresh and alive.

What can you do or say that will really make your partner feel loved?

It's different for women

Sex for many men can be automatic, planned and quick, but for many women, it is something that requires time, lots of just cuddling and maybe slowly moving towards foreplay.

Ask yourself:

- what do I know about my partner's needs and wishes?
- can we make space for both our needs and wishes, rather than only one person's which results in one person feeling they've lost and the other has won?

Sexual dysfunction

Sexual dysfunction or erectile problems are often temporary. They can be a symptom of relationship difficulties but many other factors can be the cause – health problems, stress, anxiety, concern about sexual performance, depression or the effects of a past sexual trauma.

Don't ignore it. If you have persistent problems, chat to your GP.

Love matters

- Say positive words of praise, appreciation and value, both in private and public. Look for things that your partner does well, and praise them.
- Spend quality time together. Give your partner extended times of undivided attention.
- Give special or thoughtful gifts. Gifts can be small or big. Think of things your partner really loves, such as writing them a note or a card, buying flowers or going out for dinner.
- Show affection through hugs, kisses and touch. This should make your partner feel happy, soothed and relaxed.
- Engage in soul talk. Share your most meaningful feelings and encourage your partner to share theirs. Ask questions and follow up later.
- Create beautiful romantic experiences like revisiting the place where you first met.
- Allow for space, time and activities apart, so that time together is even richer.
- Don't be possessive e.g. needing to know where your partner is 24 hours of the day or trying to control what they do.

“ I got into the habit of praising the special things that I like and that she does really well. The stuff I used to complain about became less important.”

- Rick, 42

Tool 10: Valuing differences

People are often initially attracted to one other because their partner is different to themselves. Then over time, these differences can be seen as problems.

For example, the way they took extra time to get ready was cute at first, but now it drives you crazy. Perhaps you think, "If only they were more like me, it would be fine", or even, "If only they did what I said, it would be fine."

Relationships highlight differences. We can either view these as a source of conflict, or see the differences as something to value, respect and enjoy.

Accepting differences enriches your life. Rather than wanting your partner to do things the same as you, appreciate the ways in which your partner is different from you.

Seeing difference differently

Are the differences between you and your partner a source of conflict?

- Talk about how you are different in a spirit of acceptance.
- Avoid power struggles over whose 'way' is the best way. Take turns to do things each other's way.
- See your differences as an opportunity to see the world from your partner's point of view.
- Practise patience.
- Accommodate, negotiate and respect the impact of your actions on one another.
- Notice when your partner's different perspective has a positive impact on you. Tell them.
- Value more how you, your partner and your children are different, and how you all enrich each others' lives.

“ My wife likes to go clothes shopping with her friends. It used to get to me. I have to remember she is very supportive of my projects even though they don't interest her much.”

- Adam, 36

Tool 11: Appreciation

Acknowledge your appreciation of your partner by:

- Telling them often!
- Taking responsibility for organising activities.
- Making meals or sharing household chores.
- Doing things together that your partner likes to do.
- Showing affection, giving hugs, kisses and saying, "Thank you", often.
- Giving simple gifts that have meaning to your partner.

“ I knew something was wrong in our relationship but didn't know how to approach it. Then I found heaps of intimate text messages in my partner's phone. We finally talked and decided to go to see a counsellor.

Over the past few months, it has been hard and it has demanded all my patience. It's as if we've had to back to the beginning again. I'll just see how it goes.”

- Jamal, 32

Tool 12: When trust breaks down

Feeling betrayed or experiencing breakdown of trust are some of the most difficult issues facing relationships.

Trust is a core part of the relationship. It is built up slowly, lost in an instant and only recovered in the face of repeated evidence of trustworthiness.

Destructive comments, actions, a flash point of violence or an affair are all moments where trust can vaporise.

“ If trust goes, you cannot talk it back. You cannot persuade or be persuaded that it is back. Trust is earned by actions over time. You must be trustworthy over and over again to be trusted. It took years for us to trust each other again.”

- Simon, 62

If trust breaks down in your relationship:

- ensure that all people (adults and children) are kept safe
- think first before you act! Your immediate response will be influenced by the flood of feelings you experience. It is unlikely to result in useful decision-making
- ring MensLine Australia on 1300 78 99 78
- ring Relationships Australia on 1300 364 277 for counselling
- with the support of others, talk through with your partner what has happened and what needs to occur in the future
- do not involve other parties, especially children, as it's an unhealthy way of managing your distress
- move forward and ask yourself; “What have I learnt about myself and my partner?” and “What do I need to do that will help me to do this?”

Tool 13: Children – Planning for the extension

The arrival of the first child is often the start of your steepest learning curve. You and your partner may never have done this before. Overnight, your relationship changes from being a couple, to being parents.

Men often feel there is little they can do, but actually dads have a significant impact on the mother and child's wellbeing, both when children are newborn and growing up.

The benefits of being a dad

Having a dad who is committed, sensitive and supportive of their partner and child leads to a happier and healthier life for everyone in the family.

Research shows that fathers have a significant impact on:

- reducing a child's chances of being overweight
- the mother's success at breastfeeding
- children's emotional regulation
- adolescents' social competence
- children's maths and language development.

There are even more benefits to children:

- when they are parented cooperatively by both parents
- where parents have an emotionally intimate relationship
- when kids don't feel caught up in the tensions or conflict between their parents.

What can you do?

Get involved and spend time with your children.

Work as a team, sharing the parenting:

- when children are newborns: cooking, nappy changes, getting up in the middle of the night and playing with the child
- when children are older: transport, homework, sporting activities.

Talk through the impact that children have on being intimate with your partner. With constant interruptions and disturbed sleep, intimacy and sex can take a back seat. Sometime sex is not an option, but you can find other ways to be intimate. Things like touch, holding hands, deep and meaningful conversations, writing letters to each other, and exploring your feelings of love can provide the intimacy you are looking for. Talk with and listen to your partner.

Try to have regular time off, separately and together. Organise a night at the cinema, or a meal out to allow you and your partner to reconnect with each other, so that the relationship doesn't become too distant or disconnected. Make a point of having time together in the evening, to touch base with each other, not just as parents, but as a couple as well.

No matter the age of your children:

- take the children out with you at least once a week to share activities you enjoy. Your partner will love the break
- share the responsibility for breakfast, bedtime or evening routines
- make your partner's breakfast or lunch. Ask about their day and tell them about yours.

“ I was feeling so bad, like we were in this pattern but we couldn't get out of it and I thought, well if I have a plumbing problem I get a plumber; we need an expert! We haven't looked back since.”

- Tim, 28

Resources: When it's time to consult a professional

Counselling

Lots of men struggle with the idea of seeing a counsellor, as they think, "I should be able to work this out" and "I'm not going to have someone else tell me what to do."

Myths:

- I should be able to work this out on my own.
- A counsellor will tell me what to do.
- Seeing a counsellor is failing, giving up and a sign of weakness.

Independence and self-reliance are admirable qualities, but so is consultation and reflection. When we are part of a couple we have to become both independent and interdependent in ways that we both want and value. Counselling can be helpful from time to time, to get us out of a bind or unhelpful habits.

Counselling can:

- assist you to clarify for yourself what you want
- support you to implement it yourself, because only you can
- be a source of advice, ideas and new information for you/your partner to consider.

It does take strength and courage, but a counsellor will help you use your own resources to deal with issues or find ways of improving your relationship.

Family dispute resolution

This is a service that couples usually access when they are separating. It is used to resolve issues of parenting and property. It assists couples to deal with these issues in ways that work as well as possible for them and their children, rather than going to court.

Getting legal advice as part of this process can be useful, so that decisions are not made in isolation. Separation is a difficult experience and many participants value being able to address these issues in the presence of a trained third party. It may not be appropriate if there is a history of domestic violence or mental health issues.

For more information on family dispute resolution, contact:

- Relationships Australia on 1300 364 277
- your nearest Family Relationship Centre by visiting www.familyrelationships.gov.au
- the Family Relationship Advice Line on 1800 050 321.

Where to get further assistance

Contact any of these organisations. They can refer you to services in your area.

MensLine Australia

1300 78 99 78 | mensline.org.au

MensLine Australia is the national telephone and online support, information and referral service for men with family and relationship concerns. The service is available 24/7, from anywhere in Australia and is staffed by professional counsellors, experienced in men's issues.

Relationships Australia

1300 364 277 | www.relationships.org.au

Relationships Australia (RA) is a leading provider of relationship support services for individuals, families and communities, with more than 70 years' experience.

RA is a community-based, not-for-profit Australian organisation with no religious affiliations. Their services are for all members of the community, regardless of religious belief, age, gender, sexual orientation, lifestyle choice, cultural background or economic circumstances.

RA offers services including counselling, family dispute resolution (mediation), family violence services, family and community support and education programs, and professional training services.

Services are delivered through a network of over 100 locations across all Australian states and territories.

Family Relationship Advice Line

1800 050 321 | www.familyrelationships.gov.au

The Family Relationship Advice Line is a national telephone service established to assist families affected by relationship or separation issues.

National Debt Helpline

1800 007 007 | ndh.org.au

Free, confidential, professional financial counselling service.

Services Australia - Centrelink Families Line

136 150 | www.servicesaustralia.gov.au/families

Payments and services to help you when you're having a baby and raising children.

Suicide Call Back Service

1300 659 467 | www.suicidecallbackservice.org.au

Free professional telephone counselling and support for people at risk of suicide, their carers and people bereaved by suicide. Available seven days a week, the service provides up to four sessions of specialist support with the same counsellor.

Websites

Good Connecting, an online relationships course for couples.
www.rav.org.au/good-connecting

Support for Fathers – fatherhood and family relationship support
www.supportforfathers.com.au

Suggested reading

Books

- Biddulph, S. (2002). Manhood (3rd ed). Finch Publishing.
- Edgar, D. (1997). Men, Mateship, Marriage. HarperCollins (Australia) Publishers.
- Hamilton, M. (2006). What Men Don't Talk About. Penguin.
- Hamrin, R. (2002). Great Dads: Building Loving Lasting Relationships with Your Kids. Cook Communications Ministries.
- Harris, R. (2007). The Happiness Trap. Exisle Publishing.
- Moore, T. (1994). Soul Mates. HarperCollins Publishers.
- Moore, T. (1994). Care of the Soul. HarperCollins Publishers.
- Perel, E. (2007). Mating in Captivity. Hodder & Stoughton.
- Schnarch, D. (1999). Passionate Marriage. Scribe Publications.

Relationships Australia booklets

Check out these booklets produced by Relationships Australia, available from www.relationships.org.au/relationship-advice/publications

- Partners – A Guide to Successful Relationships
- On Being a Dad

Renovate your relationship

Many men tell us that they didn't see the problems in their relationship before it was too late.

These guys wish they had done maintenance work beforehand and never reached this point. So, how you look after yourself and your partner is crucial.

Ask yourself, "If I were doing a better job on both fronts today, what would that look like?"

Often, most men don't look at instructions, such as to put furniture together, until something is seriously wrong. Don't wait until your relationship is in trouble.

Use this manual as a guide to renovate your relationship with your loved one.

Relationships Australia Victoria

1300 364 277

www.rav.org.au

Relationships Australia Victoria (RAV) has been supporting Victorians since 1948, and provides specialist family and relationship services. Our vision is for positive, respectful, safe and fulfilling relationships for all Australians.

We are committed to inclusivity and providing safe, inclusive and accessible services for all people.

Relationships Australia Victoria acknowledges the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples as the Traditional Owners of the lands and waterways of Australia. We support Aboriginal people's right to self-determination and culturally safe services.

We recognise the lifelong impacts of childhood trauma. We recognise those who had children taken away from them.

MensLine Australia

1300 78 99 78

mensline.org.au

MensLine Australia is the national telephone and online support, information and referral service for men with family and relationship concerns. The service is available from anywhere in Australia and is staffed by professional counsellors, experienced in men's issues.

MensLine Australia provides:

- A safe and private place to talk about concerns
- Confidential, anonymous and non-judgmental support
- Coaching and practical strategies for managing personal relationship concerns
- Relevant information and links to other appropriate services and programs as required
- Callers have access to 24-hour support, anywhere, anytime.

MensLine Australia is funded by the Australian Government Department of Social Services and is delivered by On the Line, Australia's leading professional telephone and online counselling provider.

