

Group Facilitation Skills

COURSE AIMS

This course develops the skills, knowledge and attitudes necessary for effectively facilitating psycho-education groups in the broad field of family, relationship and personal development education. The course focusses on the development of facilitation skills which are transferable into many fields. This course does not equip participants to deliver therapeutic groups, however many aspects of the learning is relevant and helps participants to deliver group work in the therapeutic arena, as well as in the community education, vocational and industry training sectors. The training is highly practical and requires participants to deliver a number of short sessions.

The types of groups that students will be trained to facilitate could include, but are not limited to, communication skills, self-worth, anger management and conflict resolution courses; parenting programs; personal and relationship enrichment courses; health related education sessions and working with a range of participants. The course is ideal for those who wish to work with groups where there is an educative element as well as some emphasis on the development of self-awareness, self-discovery, and the changing of attitudes and behavior.
